

The map displays a grid of land parcels, each labeled with a name and a number. The names are arranged in a systematic manner, suggesting a family or community-based settlement. The grid is divided into sections, with some sections containing multiple names. A prominent road or river runs diagonally across the map, and a winding path or stream is visible on the right side. The map is titled "Map of the settlement of the German Colonists in the State of Iowa" and includes a scale bar and a north arrow.

Key features of the map include:

- Grid System: The map is organized into a grid of land parcels, each labeled with a name and a number.
- Names and Numbers: Names are arranged in a systematic manner, suggesting a family or community-based settlement. Numbers are often placed next to the names, possibly indicating land area or parcel size.
- Diagonal Road/River: A prominent road or river runs diagonally across the map, likely a major thoroughfare or waterway.
- Winding Path/Stream: A winding path or stream is visible on the right side of the map, possibly a local water source or travel route.
- Scale and Orientation: The map includes a scale bar and a north arrow, indicating its geographical context.

The map provides a detailed view of the settlement's layout, showing the distribution of land and the names of the residents. The systematic arrangement of names and numbers suggests a planned or organized settlement pattern.
